Competition and cooperation among the twelve colleges

Pure college boarding

The traditional day-schooling method easily causes a split between students' growth in school and after school, but this is not the case with full-time holistic education. Compared with parents who are "first-time parents", teachers involved in school boarding management have experience in living, studying or working in boarding schools, and have accumulated a lot of valuable experience in getting along with children of different ages.

Each house has a dean and several tutors who work closely together to monitor their academic progress, development of social skills, and healthy physical and mental growth.

The teacher who teaches physics in class may also be the teacher who takes the children to play football in the evening. The children's growth is presented to the teachers in five dimensions. The teachers can not only observe the children's academic performance and emotional health in a timely manner, but also see the children's unique shining points. Whether it is sports, art, music, or drama, many children's talents that they are not aware of can be discovered by the tutors, and personalized growth plans can be customized for them.

Boarding schools make the most efficient use of time for learning and growth, which not only saves a lot of time wasted on the road, but also enables students to grow beyond the classroom through competitions. In the evenings and weekends, they receive academic tutoring, artistic creation, or music practice based on their own circumstances, using the "long board" theory to continuously pursue excellence.
